

2.2 MANDATORY USE

PPE must be used when risks cannot be avoided or sufficiently reduced by technical prevention measures, collective protective equipment or measures, methods and procedures for organising work. PPE must be used only for its intended uses, except in specific and exceptional cases, in accordance with the manufacturer's instructions.

It must also be worn in an emergency or in the case of exceptional unforeseeable exposure, and it cannot be an alternative to technically feasible protection systems, but must only be additional protection against residual or occasional risks, such as extraordinary maintenance.

MANDATORY SIGNS OR ORDERS

Mandatory signs and orders (round using blue and white) inform workers of the devices and Personal Protective Equipment that they have to use (e.g. safety glasses, gloves, etc.)

Mandatory signs and orders (round using blue and white) inform workers of the devices and Personal Protective Equipment that they have to use (e.g. safety glasses, gloves, etc.). They are part of the "occupational health and safety signs" (see 2.2.1 "Signs") adopted by the employer, which "... with reference to an object, activity or specific situation, provide information or instructions about occupational health and safety, and which use, as appropriate, a board, colour, light or sound, verbal communication or hand gesture."

Adopting specific signs is one element of safety measures, an effective means of prevention, but definitely not exhaustive.
